HISTORY

The history of Cozumel is linked to the Mayan civilization. Cozumel was a sacred Mayan shrine referred to as Ah-Cuzamil-Peten, or "Island of the Swallows."

In the 10th century, the Mayan civilization began to decline. The primary reason for the decline was the influence of the more aggressive Toltecs. Many Mayans were killed in battle or sacrificed, while some were assimilated into the conquering tribes. By the 12th century, the Toltec cult of the god Quetzalcoatl, meaning "plumed serpent," dominated the Mayan culture. Fighting ended in 1540, when the Spanish invaded the Yucatan Peninsula. The last Mayan city, near Lake Peten in Guatemala, fell to the Spanish in 1697.

The Spanish first arrived on Cozumel in 1518, early in their conquest of the Americas. With Cortes' arrival, many of the Mayan temples were destroyed. When he left the island, not only did the native civilization lie in ruins, but an outbreak of smallpox swept the island. From the population of 40,000 that Cortes reported in 1519, the number was a mere 300 by 1570. And 30 years later, the island was completely abandoned.

Although pirates used Cozumel as a base in the 17th century, the island wasn't resettled until 1848, when people sought refuge from the "War of the Castes" on the Mexican mainland. This struggle, an often violent attempt by natives of Mayan ancestry to regain their lands, lasted until a surrender to government troops in 1901. Important land reforms and freedom for the Indians resulted from the Revolution of 1910-1917. By 1970, the population had reached 10,000, and today some 67,000 people inhabit this island paradise.

LOCAL FLAVORS

Cozumel's famed Avenida Rafael Melgar and the connecting streets are filled with some of the world's best shopping. The streets flower with Mexican arts and crafts, the finest sterling silver, onyx carvings, leather goods, duty-free goods from around the world, and locally cultivated tequilas and vanillas. A walk down the avenue is made all the more pleasant by sampling the exotic drinks and tastes in the local shops along the way.
